to visit that most interesting of structures, the old Forest church, in which Roger Williams preached fearlessly the radical doctrines that the people would not accept and for which he was finally panished from the colony. But his spirit was not broken nor his tongue atilled. It was not because of his spir itual teachings, but because he waged war against the magistrates and some of the civil laws that he had to flee from the colony.

The old Forest church is a tiny structure. It was built in 1630 by a congrethe making of the new interoceanic gation of Unitarians organized in Salem in 1629. Its first pastor was Francis Higginson and its third pastor was Roger Williams, who had come to Boston in 1631, "a young minister, godly and zealous, with his wife Mary." He would not join the congregation in Boston because the people would not ting for several draws at the residence of zation. Naturally, anxiety is felt to make public declaration of their repentance for having been in communion with the Church of England. So he went to Salem, where he, in true perlance of our day, "sailed into" the magistrates, denying their right to punish Sabbath-breaking and other religious offenses as belonging to the first table of the law The records declare that he was not "treated nor tormented" as a heretic by this church. He was ext trampled upon the rights of the people in their social, civil and ecclesiastical
